

ABSTRACT

A domain name server (DNS) associated with a data network, including means for the reception of requests R containing a domain name and the means to return to the sender of the request a response containing one or more addresses associated with the domain name, characterised in that the addresses are sequenced within the response by the domain name server.

Figure to be published: 1